DISCOVER NEW JERSEY HISTORY

Colonial re-creations and preserved Victorian architecture are vivid reminders that New Jersey has been an integral part of many of America's most enduring historic moments.

From the site of Washington's Crossing of the Delaware River north of Trenton, to Liberty State Park, where you can visit the Statue of Liberty and Ellis Island, New Jersey is alive with history for the 21st century.

Fully experiencing New Jersey's rich history means getting to know the state's earliest inhabitants, the Lenni Lenape Indians. Their legacy lives on in towns with names like Hackensack, Lake Hopatcong, Manahawkin and Rancocas.

When touring historic New Jersey, travel in the wake of Giovanni da Verrazano, who explored the state's coastline for France in 1524. Henry Hudson, another early explorer, sailed into Newark Bay some 85 years later and paved the way for the state's first settlement to be established by the Dutch in 1620. Learn about the European power struggle that ceded the area to the English who would govern until the Continental Army wrested power from them in the Revolutionary War. Along the way, see why the state's reputation as the "Crossroads of the American Revolution" is well deserved, with hundreds of battles and skirmishes fought on New Jersey soil, some of the most severe at places like Fort Mercer, Monmouth and Trenton. Learn of the three winters that George Washington's Army camped here and of their presence in Princeton at the end of the war in 1783.

On the subject of historic "firsts," New Jersey has many to be proud of. In 1869, there was the first intercollegiate football game when Rutgers defeated Princeton by the score of 6-4. Thomas Edison pioneered the electric light bulb and motion pictures at Menlo Park and the first American-built steam locomotive was built in Hoboken. And even Fort Lee was the movie industry's first "Capital," featuring stars like Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and Rudolph Valentino.

So, for a rewarding historical tour, visit New Jersey and experience the places and events that contributed so much to America's birth and growth.

SPOTLIGHT ON ATLANTIC CITY

When it comes to Atlantic City's reputation as a world-class resort, 34 million visitors a year can't be wrong.

The city offers 12 fabulous hotel casino resorts, with gaming, luxury accommodations, fine dining, great shopping, sun, sand, surf and much, much more.

While the casinos are a top draw for the city, the historic four-mile boardwalk – the world's first – remains an equally alluring attraction for visitors, who can still experience the feeling of the original 1800s boardwalk era and indulge in some timeless traditions like saltwater taffy (another Atlantic City first), the boardwalk shops, amusements, the famous rolling chairs and the piers.

The wooden promenade was conceived to solve a problem – keeping beach sand out of rugs in hotels and businesses and off the seats of the Camden and Atlantic Railroad passenger cars that brought visitors into town. Along with the success of the boardwalk, another innovation, the amusement pier, has proved highly popular with visitors, entertaining millions during the past 100 years.

Perhaps the world's most famous pier opened on June 18, 1898. The 1,621-foot-long Steel Pier was so named because it was the first pier constructed with a steel framework. Today, the Steel Pier continues to attract visitors in droves, who enjoy the shops and amusements. In past years the Steel Pier has been host to conventions and the Miss America Pageants that began in 1921 as a way to extend the summer season.

Atlantic City is also credited with inspiring Monopoly inventor Charles Darrow, who named the games streets after those he knew as a visitor to the seaside resort.

In Atlantic City, visitors can relive history while enjoying world-class facilities, entertainment, restaurants and gaming.

The Crossroads of the Revolution

New Jersey is the site of a number of critically important battles during the Revolutionary War. In fact, it was the Battles of Trenton and Princeton that began to turn the tide for the Continental Army.

The Clarke House, Princeton Battlefield

Until then, British forces had won key fights in New York and had driven the Continentals out of Fort Lee, forcing their retreat all the way into Pennsylvania. After these defeats, morale among the Continental forces was low and deserters were leaving the ranks each day, many signing papers of allegiance with the British. If not for Washington's daring crossing of the ice-filled Delaware River on Christmas night in 1776 and the uplifting victories in Trenton and Princeton that soon followed, chances were slim that he would have been able to keep the Army together and rally the political and public opinion needed to support the effort.

SPOTLIGHT ON THE CROSSROADS OF
THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION

New Jersey is known as the “Crossroads of the American Revolution.” Major Revolutionary War battles were fought here and Gen. George Washington and his main Army spent more time in New Jersey than any place else.

Those visiting the Delaware River Region will have the opportunity to experience some of the Revolutionary War sites that played a vital role in America’s quest for freedom and independence.

Visitors can relive and retrace the Ten Crucial Days at sites that preserve the importance of three monumental battles that changed the course of the war. This critical period – Dec. 25, 1776 through Jan. 3, 1777 – began on Christmas night 1776, when Washington took the bold initiative of mounting an attack on British-hired Hessian troops stationed in Trenton.

On that frigid and stormy Christmas night, Washington’s force of about 2,400 Continentals boarded boats to cross the icy Delaware River for the march on Trenton. Two other elements of the Continental Army were to cross the river south of Trenton to block any Hessian escape. The storm and ice prevented them from landing in New Jersey, leaving Washington’s troops to assault the city alone.

Washington’s plan had been to launch a pre-dawn attack on the morning of Dec. 26. The storm delayed Washington’s arrival in Trenton until 8 a.m. But the storm also aided the Continentals. The Hessians standing guard at the outpost thought the first Continentals they saw coming out of the mists were their relief party. The Hessians did not believe the Americans could mount a large attack and were ill prepared for the assault.

The surprise of the attack and the speed at which American forces moved into and around the town completely disrupted the Hessian efforts to form their troops for a counter-attack.

Visitors can relive the landing at Washington's Crossing State Park and see a reenactment that is held each year on Christmas Day.

In Trenton, visitors can also walk through the impeccably restored Old Barracks Museum that housed some of the Hessian troops that faced Washington and the Trenton Battle Monument – the site where Continental artillery units shelled the Hessians during the 90-minute battle on Dec. 26.

A week later the British launched a counter-attack intended to crush the Americans.

Following a day of fighting and defending their positions in Trenton, Washington quietly slipped his troops out of Trenton and using back roads he headed north to Princeton where on Jan. 3 the American's again engaged and defeated British forces.

The two Battles of Trenton were pivotal in keeping the Revolution alive.

Each year Patriot's Week offers authentic reenactments through the streets of Trenton plus debates, films, lectures and much more. Even more interesting is that the Trenton reenactment is in the streets so visitors will be very close to the action.

SPOTLIGHT ON THE GATEWAY TO FREEDOM

Experience the nation's Gateway to freedom, with a visit to Ellis Island and the Statue of Liberty, two living examples of America's commitment to freedom.

At Ellis Island, visitors can relive the experience of more than 12 million immigrants who passed through its doors between 1892 and 1954 and retrace the history of the federal immigration-processing center that opened on Jan. 1, 1892.

After undergoing a massive $162 million restoration, Ellis Island today offers visitors an array of programs including a genealogy workshop, theatrical productions based on actual immigrant accounts, a learning center, a museum and a new family history research facility.

In immediate proximity to Ellis Island is the Statue of Liberty, France's gift to the United States that was designed to commemorate the Centennial of American Independence. In July of 1884, French sculptor Frederic Auguste Bartholdi, with assistance from French structural engineer Alexandre Gustave Eiffel (designer of the Eiffel Tower), completed the statue that was officially titled "Liberty Enlightening the World."

One year later, in June of 1885, the statue arrived in New York Harbor. Dedicated on Oct. 28, 1886, the Statue of Liberty is located on Liberty Island, formerly Bedloe's Island, in New York Harbor and sits inside the star-shaped walls of Fort Wood. It lies about 1/4-mile from Liberty State Park.

Today, visitors can tour the historic statue and have access to a museum, which offers a complete history of the statue, along with a number of exhibits.

The Gateway Region offers visitors an opportunity to see and experience firsthand two of the nation's premier historic sites that stand today as a living tribute to America's unyielding commitment to freedom and opportunity for all.

SPOTLIGHT ON THE BATTLE OF MONMOUTH

Visitors with a keen appreciation of America's Revolutionary War history won't want to miss the annual reenactment of the Battle at Monmouth held every June at Monmouth Battlefield State Park.

The annual reenactment is one of the largest in the nation that draws 20,000 spectators a year and is based on the battle of June 28, 1778, which marked the beginning of the end of British rule over the 13 American colonies.

It involved both ground forces and artillery units that exchanged bullets and cannonballs during the daylong battle in blistering heat. Visitors will be engulfed by the realism of the reenactment that features both cannon and musket fire and authentically dressed troops camped out in the park.

In addition to the "soldiers," there are living-history camps with family members dressed in period clothing, merchants and ongoing artillery, infantry and cavalry demonstrations.

The event commemorates the period in our history when the French-Continental alliance forced the British on the defensive.

They evacuated Philadelphia and marched across New Jersey toward their base in New York City with 20,000 men and 1,500 vehicles.

General Washington moved his 15,000-man army from Valley Forge to pursue the enemy. Washington did not want to endanger the Continental Army in an all-out battle, but politics and morale required some action against the British Columns.

The British arrived in Monmouth on June 26, 1778. With the temperature nearing 100 degrees, the Red Coats were staggering from the heat and humidity. On the evening of June 27, 1778, Washington arrived at nearby Englishtown and ordered Major General Charles Lee – commander of a 5,000-man advance force – to attack the rear of the British contingent the next morning.

Lee had voted against attacking the British. He believed the British were better trained and would maul the Continentals. But Lee was unaware of the strength of the American Army. The troops had spent their time at Valley Forge training and were better organized than ever before.

Despite his reluctance, Lee was drawn into battle with the British. By mid-morning on the 28th, Lee thought he saw an opportunity to encircle the British 1,500-man rear guard. As the Continentals moved to attack, they were surprised by the rapid return of 8,000 additional British infantry and the Continental advance force began a confused retreat.

Angered by Lee's failure, Washington ordered Lee to fight a delaying action while he organized the main Continental Army in a defensive position. Washington planned to resume the battle the next day, but the British managed to slip away during the night. Neither side emerged a clear winner, but the American forces had proven themselves as a professional fighting force.

One fabled hero to emerge from the fight was Mary Ludwig Hays, wife of Pennsylvania artilleryman William Hays. During the war, she carried water to swab out the heated cannon barrels. But when her husband collapsed from the brutal heat, she took his place at the cannon and fought on. For her brave deed, history has named her Molly Pitcher.

The Battle at Monmouth cemented Washington's role as commander of the Revolution and proved that the American fighting man was the equal of Europe's best soldiers.

Morristown National Historical Park

The New Jersey Brigade of 1,300 men camped a few miles south of Gen. Washington's main army camped at Jockey Hollow during the "hard winter" of 1779-1780. Washington selected this area because of its strategic location in the Watchung Mountains and since it was heavily wooded from which shelters could be constructed. Archaeological investigation in 1968 revealed a road leading to Morristown from the encampment where a number of huts were discovered. It became part of the Morristown National Historical Park in 1969.

SPOTLIGHT ON CAPE MAY

Step back in time and experience America's Victorian era realistically captured in Cape May.

The town was established in the early 1800s and billed as the "Queen of Seaside Resorts." Cape May became a lavish and thriving community of hotels, oceanside entertainment and opulent private resort homes. A great deal of the town's cherished architectural heritage was developed during the period.

But disaster struck in 1878, when a raging fire destroyed almost half of the city. Cape May and its residents quickly rebounded rebuilding in the Victorian architectural style of the city.

Both residents and visitors wanted to retain the city's former grandeur. That grandeur exists today through the Victorian restoration and preservation efforts.

In 1976, Cape May was declared a National Historic Landmark City. With that designation and the work of residents and elected officials, Cape May today boasts 600 restored Victorian buildings. Travelers can visit the Emlen Physick Estate, Cape May's only Victorian House Museum, or the Chalfonte Hotel, Cape May's oldest operating hotel that features elaborate gingerbread trim.

Trolley and walking tours, both guided and self guided, of Cape May's Historic District are also available and visitors can immerse themselves in Victorian history, stroll down gas-lit streets and experience the meticulously restored Victorian homes and buildings, Cape May's unique shops and distinctive Bed & Breakfasts.

The city also hosts a spring music festival, Victorian week each October and Victorian Christmas events.

When in the Southern Shore Region, be sure to visit Bridgeton, New Jersey's largest Historical District with more than 2,000 homes and buildings from the Colonial, Federalist and Victorian periods.

SPOTLIGHT ON THE MILITARY CAPITAL OF
THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION

Visitors traveling to the Skylands Region can explore where Gen. George Washington set his headquarters and quartered his troops during the winters of 1777 and 1779-80.

On Jan. 4, 1777, immediately following the victorious Battle at Princeton, Washington decided not to attack New Brunswick where the British had retreated. Instead, he moved the army into winter quarters at Morristown. Washington and the Continental Army considered Morristown's location a safe haven.

The Watchung Mountains and nearby swamps afforded protection for the army, there were adequate provisions and the local residents were helpful. As a result, Morris County and Morristown in particular, became known as "The Military Capital of the American Revolution."

During the winter of 1777, Washington stayed in Arnold's Tavern, which was on the Morristown Green. While the tavern no longer exists, the Green remains a center of tradition and activities for Morristown.

During his second winter encampment of 1779-80, Washington was housed in the massive Georgian-style Jacob Ford Mansion, which is now preserved as part of the Morristown National Historical Park, the first national historical park in America.

Close by Washington's winter residence is Jockey Hollow, where the Continental Army camped. It too is part of the national park and contains the Wick House and farmstead and several reconstructed soldiers' huts. At the time, Jockey Hollow had from 1,000 to 1,200 such huts to house around 12,000 troops.

Each of the huts measured 14 feet by 16 feet and housed 12 soldiers. Living conditions for the soldiers were particularly brutal during the winter of 1779-80.

Classified as the worst winter in 100 years, food was often in short supply, or nonexistent, as 26 storms between November 1779 and April 1780 slowed or blocked the delivery of food and other supplies. In some cases snowdrifts measured as high as 15 feet and there was 11 to 18 feet of ice in New York Harbor.

The Skylands Region not only offers some of the most spectacular scenery in the Northeast; it also offers a unique glimpse into New Jersey's contribution to the American Revolution through the preserved historical sites found around the region.
